Location:

La Oliva is the most northern and at the same time the second largest of the six municipalities of Fuerteventura, whose towns include Corralejo, Lajares, Villaverde, La Oliva, Parque Holandes, El Cotillo, Tindaya, El Roque, Vallebron, Caldereta, Majanicho and the uninhabited Isla de Lobos.

The name La Oliva is said to have originated from the abundant wild olive trees in this region. For several years, Fuerteventura was administered from La Oliva before Puerto del Rosario became the island's capital.

The towns of El Cotillo and Corralejo are very popular for tourists, while Villaverde also impresses with its unusually green surroundings. The dune area of Corralejo, which is under protection, is also one of the places of interest.
